Sidewalk construction

Wilmington DPW workers are building a sidewalk on Glen Road at Brattle Street. The town had built a sidewalk along most of the road in the late 1970's, but in a few places, property owners hesitated to have the sidewalk built. The permission is needed because the road has no official layout, and to create such a layout to required standards would mean the taking of some homes. The result is that the sidewalk is actually on private property of the abutters. The town last fall secured permission from the property owner, allowing the 100-foot section to be built. With this section completed, there will be two remaining sections without sidewalks, one at St. Paul Street, the other at Glendale Circle.

Town budget in limbo after veto of 'overlay'

The Town of Wilmington is in a wait-and-see position in relation to the town budget. Last week's veto of the "overlay" account and an excise tax increase by Gov. Weld could leave the town with a $600,000 shortfall.

According to Town Manager Michael Caira, the town has three options. They could reduce the budget by an additional $600,000, forcing additional layoffs and program cuts.

They could pass an override of Prop. 2 1/2. The governor has spoken of a "Super Tuesday" election with Prop. 2 1/2 overrides on the ballot across the state.

The third option is a teachers' salary deferral plan which was included in the budget. This would shift teachers' pay for June 1992 into July, a two-week delay which would move the expenditure into the next year's budget. Caira said that this would cover the entire $600,000 shortfall. It could be repeated, putting of the payback until FY 1994, by which time a source of funding might appear.

He said that he would be presenting the options to the selectmen, fincom and school committee. He said he already had discussions with the chairmen of each board.

"Do people want to make the cuts?" he asked. "Do you just hold your nose and do it?"

The other possible scenario is that the legislature could override the governor's veto. Caira said that while the governor had a deadline for signing the budget, the legislature had no time line on the matter. They could take the entire session if that suited them, he said.

Caira said the town had a lean budget already, and it would certainly not be in the best interests of the town to hack away at it.

Caira said he needed to wait for the actual numbers on the cherry sheets before making any decisions.

Grievances denied on layoff policy

by Arlene Surprenant

The Wilmington School Committee voted last week to deny grievances filed by 12 teachers who had been laid off under the Reduction in Force (RIF) policy. The grievances now are expected to go to arbitration, a lengthy process which could reportedly take up to seven months.

In a departure from past practice, committeemen elected to discuss the grievances in open session. The discussion was slated to be heard in executive session. On learning from School Attorney Alan Altman that there was nothing in the teachers' contract requiring grievances to be heard in closed session, the board chose to hear arguments by the grievance committee in public.

Grievance Committee Chairman Joe Kleponis and WTA President John Wood argued that since the grievances weren't yet public and the men had only 10 minutes notice of the change, they preferred to be heard in executive session. Committeemen turned down the request in a five to one vote. Phil Fenton was the lone dissenter. A request to continue the hearing to another date to allow for consultation with the union's attorney was made, then withdrawn.

During the hearing, Kleponis and Wood argued against the board's interpretation of the RIF policy. They said the contract offers "absolute seniority rights" to teachers, which are based on the date of employment and the date the school board approved employment. The men explained the basis for their grievance is the fact that the School Committee is obligated to transfer any tenured teacher who holds valid certification in another area to a non-tenured position. They added the RIF policy wasn't being followed because non-tenured personnel are being brought back while there are still qualified, certified tenured teachers who could take their place.

Chairman Aldo Caira observed since there was such a wide difference of opinion this was "something that's going to have to be decided in the courts."

In a rare show of unanimity, the school board voted unanimously to deny the grievances. The board now has 10 days to notify the union in writing of its decision. Wood said the board will most likely go to arbitration but he would first consult with the WTA attorney on the best course of action to follow. It is expected two more teachers laid off that same night would also file grievances.

Reading Light outlines plans for rate increase

by Larz F. Neilson

Facing an increase from Boston Edison, the Reading Municipal Light Dept. (RMLD) is proposing a rate increase that would average 5.5 percent. The increase would be linked with a change to a wider variety of rate schedules, such as large commercial and small commercial, and eventually a time-of-use rate for residential users.

At a meeting with members of the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce on Tuesday morning, RMLD officials initiated a program of soliciting input from customer groups prior to finalizing any decisions on the proposed rate increase.

Calling the changes the first significant rate adjustment since 1985, General Manager Len Rucker said that Reading Light had been absorbing costs that had hit the department. The greatest cost, however, is that of purchased power, which makes up 90 percent of the cost of running the department.

In addition to the 5.5 percent increase, RMLD plans to draw $5.2 million from its rate stabilization fund. This fund has been used in recent years to avoid rate changes for fluctuations in the power market.

As proposed, the rates would increase for small business customers, and decrease some for large industrial customers. Vin Cameron, manager of energy services, said that was due to the efficiency with which industrial users manage their needs.

Reading Light is the largest municipal power department in New England, serving Reading, Wilmington, North Reading and part of Lynnfield.

Rucker said that RMLD has changed radically in recent years, and is now a much more consumer-oriented utility. He said that the department was soliciting input prior to finalizing its rates, out of a belief that it was a good business practice for a public utility. RMLD has changed from a three member board to one with five, plus a Citizens Advisory Board. Rucker also said that RMLD was now charging the same street lighting rate for all towns.

Of the power that RMLD purchases, about 25 percent currently comes from Boston Edison. Edison is raising its rates five to six percent a year, a total of 37 percent over the life of the contract. Rucker spoke of the possibility of RMLD leaving Edison and going possibly with New England Electric.

"I can't pay my electric bill now, and you're going to increase it by $140 a month!" complained Bernie Grodzynsky, owner of the Wilmington Quality Car Wash.

Also critical of the proposal was Rocco DePasquale. He said that the restaurant business survives off people's discretionary income. With the recession, business is off 20 to 30 percent.

The meeting ran for two and a half hours, with several questions from people involved with local industry.

Len Blanchette of Analog Devices wanted to know why RMLD is not offering any help for customers in terms of load management. He spoke of thermal storage, customers with generators to reduce peak load, and more efficient loads. He said that Analog was able to advantage of these at its Norwood plant, where Boston Edison is the supplier.

Rucker replied that as a publicly-owned utility, RMLD could not invest in equipment to benefit a particular industrial user. Being private, Boston Edison could.

He said that RMLD was investigating how such innovations could be worked into the system.

RMLD is hoping to implement the rate increase in late summer or early fall. It must be filed with the Mass. Department of Public Utilities (DPU) and given a 30-day waiting period for feedback.

Two more teachers given pink slips

by Arlene Surprenant

Two more teachers were riffed last Wednesday, bringing to 23 the number of teachers cut from the Wilmington School System. Most of the discussion, however, centered on concerns of the teaching load of social studies teacher Al Fessenden, who is also coordinator of the Wilmington Business/School Partnership and head of the work study program, and the fate of the partnership program next year.

Both Jerome Connelly (social studies) and Fred Crispo (industrial arts) were laid off in five to two votes of the board. Phil Fenton and John DeMarco voted against the cuts, despite assurances by Supt. William Fay that in the interest of consistency, he would just proceed to the next person on the list if the board voted against his recommendation. In earlier tries, committeemen refused to riff the teachers.

Peggy Kane raised questions on a comment by Fay that Fessenden would be teaching two social studies classes next year as well as continuing with work study and doing some work with the business partnership. Kane pointed out the committee had cut three social studies teachers and needs Fessenden to teach more than two classes so the high school doesn't lose any sections in that subject. She also maintained the partnership had been cut previously by a majority vote of the board and charged that the superintendent had not followed through on that vote.

DeMarco disagreed. He claimed the committee only cut the full time coordinator's position and not the program itself.

"I had no instruction from this committee to cut the concept," said Fay.

"I think it's fine lining it," noted Dr. Shirley Callan. She added she, too, felt the program had been eliminated.

Fay said it was up to the board to "kill" the program by instructing him to sever ties already established with the business community. Those ties, he added, had brought in "tens of thousands of dollars" to the system since the program's inception.

"I don't really wish to sever all relations with the community," said Fenton. He observed that in the last two years he saw a good relationship developing between the local school system and local businesses.

Andrea Paglia suggested following the same procedure that was followed with the gifted and talented program. DeMarco motioned to direct the superintendent to develop alternate possibilities for a partnership program. The vote was three to three until the chairman broke the tie and voted in favor of the motion. Dr. Callan, Kane, and Paglia were opposed.

In other action, the board went along with Fay's recommendation to reduce social studies teacher Joy Boucher and reinstate fellow instructor Abigail Russell, who was one of the original teachers laid off. Fay said Russell had more seniority in the department. Committeemen also passed over a recommendation to recall elementary teacher Joan Connelly until such time as the fiscal picture becomes clearer.

The battle of the ice cream vendors went through court last week, but does not yet seem to be resolved.

Tina Maynard, proprietor of Sunny Day Ice Cream, went to Lowell Superior Court last Wednesday to get an injunction against the town of Wilmington and Michelle's Ice Cream.

As granted, the injunction is supposed to prohibit either party from interfering with her doing business at the Silver Lake beach.

After the two vendors had become embroiled in a battle over business at the beach parking lot two years ago, the town last year set up a bid arrangement. The town asked $1000 for the right to sell at the beach for a two month period.

Michelle's paid the $1000 for the 1990 season; Maynard did not.

This year, Michelle's entered into a 12-month agreement with the town, where for $2000, Michelle's would have exclusive rights to sell at the beach.

Maynard was not approached by the town for an opportunity to bid on the rights. Town Manager Michael Caira said that the invitation to bid was extended to those holding town peddlers' licenses and to those who had previously bid on rights to sell at the beach. The three persons approached for bids were all members of the same family, Angelo, Annette and Michelle Ciaramaglia of Michelle's Ice Cream.

Maynard charged that the town failed to comply with the open procurement law, and filed for an injunction. Town Counsel Alan Altman took the position that the law did not apply to the situation.

Judge Kelley, nevertheless, granted a temporary restraining order against the town.

Caira called it a horrendous decision. "He's taking away the ability of the town to supervise its property," he said.

Caira said that the judge did not cite any law as the basis for his action. The town is appealing the decision to a single justice, with the matter expected to be heard this week.

The interpretation of the restraining order is causing some controversy.

Maynard went to the parking lot at Silver Lake on Tuesday afternoon and parked in a space which Michelle's has been using. After Michelle's complained to a life-guard, police were called. According to Maynard, a sergeant told her she would be arrested if she did not leave the parking space. She showed him the injunction, which she said he paid no attention to.

Caira said on Wednesday that the town was complying with the injunction. He said the judge was telling them they had to allow her into the parking lot, but that the particular parking space was reserved for Michelle's Ice Cream, who had paid the town $2000 for that spot.

Caira said that Maynard's modus operandi was to stir the pot and cause trouble.

Eye emergencies demand quick action

Eye emergencies demand quick action. Emergencies can be classified in terms of chemical injury, thermal burns and trauma. Fast action is important to preserve the eye. Chemical injuries may be considered as irritants such as alcohols and/or volatile substances, strong acids, or strong bases. The most potentially damaging type of chemical burn comes from a strong base (also called alkali). These burns are dangerous because not only do they injure the eye immediately, but if not neutralized they continue a slow, dissolving process destroying the proteins that compose the wall of the eye itself. The best treatment for these injuries is generous irrigation - an eye rinse bottle would be an ideal start. However, if a bottle of eye irrigating solution is not at hand, cold tap water in large amounts should be used to irrigate the eye while calling the local emergency room for further advice.

Dry chemicals such as lime or plaster can be even more damaging than the liquid chemical burn. The dry particles represent a powder gradually liquefies high concentration of chemical in a very small area. As the powder gradually liquefies in the tears, it has a strong concentration on the eye. It is important that the injured person get to an emergency room, so the eye can be completely evaluated. The lid must be turned over and carefully inspected even at the microscopic level for any residual particles that might destroy the eye. Thorough flushing will be performed to protect the eye.

Thermal burns from match heads, cigarette tips, hot solder or welding slag are extremely painful and require prompt evaluation by the emergency room and ophthalmologist. Attempting to flick off slag that has burned itself into the eye at home is extremely risky. There is always the risk that the slag may be deeper embedded in the eye than it appears and that the use of any nonsterile object for removing these foreign bodies risks further injury and infection.

In addition to the immediate injury, inflammation may occur after chemical, thermal or traumatic injuries which can lead to complications that can threaten sight. Trauma is perhaps the most uncontrolled emergency. An apparently trivial blow from a fist, elbow, or soft ball can cause either superficial injury or injury deep within the eye involving bleeding or retinal detachment. These injuries are not possible to accurately assess at home. At a minimum, they should be seen promptly by the emergency room or ophthalmologist before the swelling causes the eye to close.

The best system for handling emergencies is, of course, prevention. Whenever working with chemicals, follow all directions regarding chemical reactions, splashing and protective eye wear. When dealing with trauma, do not try to repair the eye yourself. Carefully shield the eye, but do not press on it and report immediately to your emergency room or ophthalmologist for a more complete evaluation and protection.

Phillip M. Gendelman, M.D. has office hours at the Regional Health Center in Wilmington, an affiliate of Winchester Hospital, and may be reached by calling (508) 657-3910.

THIS YEAR ONLY DEDUCTIONS ON ART

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 closed a lot of loopholes that enabled rich donors to get tax benefits - deductions of full, appreciated value - gifts of appreciated property to charity. For 1991 only, the loophole is open again, though with stricter limits.

At issue are donations by individuals who are subject to the Alternative Minimum Income (AMI) tax. Under the 1986 rules, they could deduct only their cost or other basis in the property, which was considered a tax preference item for AMI purposes. This year only, they can deduct full market value.

*If the donated items are tangible personal property such as works of art or manuscripts,

*If the donor would realize a long-term capital gain selling the item, and

*If the organization uses the gift for its tax-exempt purpose - giving a painting to a museum to show, for instance, not to sell.

Can you meet all the criteria for deductible gifts? Talk it over with us at...

Wilmington eyes Olin site for sewage treatment plant

The Wilmington Water & Sewer Commissioners last Thursday voted to increase the rates for dumping into the sewer from septage trucks. The new rate is $100 per load, double the previous rate. The commissioners voted that the rate would become effective Monday morning, July 15.

The increase in charges to septage trucks was only a part of the business of last Thursday, much of it being because of the increase in sewer costs by the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority (MWRA). As could be expected, there was a lengthy discussion.

The MWRA in recent weeks had increased both sewer and water rates to the communities which it serves around Boston.

There was no increase in Wilmington water rates, since the town supplies its own water. The MWRA sewer rates to the town, the commissioners said, had increased by 44 1/2 percent.

Effective in October, when the new billing period starts, the Water & Sewer Commission will be charging 34 percent more for sewerage to householders and business firms in Wilmington.

In one sense at least, the commissioners were partly prepared for the increase in costs. For several months the population of Massachusetts has been discussing the increase in MWRA costs, and the commissioners were also aware.

They had been eyeing a 49 acre tract of land, formerly used by several chemical firms, off West Street, adjacent to the railroad, and also adjacent to Woburn.

The plant was once National Polychemicals, then Stepan and then Olin. Olin closed the plant about two years ago, and the property is for the most part vacant. Because of the nature of the chemical plant which occupied the site, there has been some concern expressed over possible pollution on the site.

The commissioners have agreed, informally, that the 49 acres could be a site for a Wilmington sewerage plant. The town's sewer system exits Wilmington via an interceptor sewer which runs adjacent to the Olin property.

There are several communities in eastern Massachusetts that have sewerage plants similar to the one of which the commissioners are thinking.

Such a plant in Wilmington would put the sewer costs more directly in the hands of the Wilmington commissioners. A study of the idea, they have agreed, would be worthwhile.

Engineering companies in eastern Massachusetts have been asked to submit sewerage plant feasibility studies. There were six replies on the table last Thursday as the commissioners discussed the rising costs.

The contents of those envelopes were divided. Each commissioner has a full set of answers, which he can study at home. Maybe in a month or two the commissioners will discuss the proposals.

There are a number of sewer plants such as the one of which the commissioners of Wilmington are thinking. Three are to be found on the banks of the Merrimack River.

The Duck Island plant in Lowell takes care of the septage of that city and of Tewksbury. The river is the place to which the fresh water goes, after treatment.

More sewer plants are in both Lawrence and Haverhill, on the Merrimack. Salem/Beverly and Fitchburg have similar plants.

Checks

The commissioners voted last week to no longer accept personal checks in payment of bills from home owners who are selling their domiciles to others. The department, it turned out, had been given a "no funds" check by a Wilmington resident who had sold his home back in 1989.

The new owners were at the commissioners' meeting on July 11. They had an increase in their household water bill of over $300 plus charges because of the "insufficient" check. Naturally they were not happy.

Before they had agreed to purchase, they told the commissioners, they had checked over the finances, and had seen a receipt from the Wilmington Water Department, everything paid up to date.

The discussion brought out that the previous owner had bought another home in Wilmington and that other payments by him to the town were behind schedule. Things were in such a state, the commissioners were told, that Town Manager Mike Cairns is considering having a warrant sworn out against that individual.

The previous owner, it seems, has knowingly issued checks when he did not have funds in the bank.

Further, the commissioners were told, that man's mother has come into town several times to pay for bills that had been incurred, but from her own account.

One could feel sorry for the lady. The commissioners were told that the Wilmington Fire Department, from time to time also "gets bagged," for accepting a $5 check required for inspection of home fire alarms.

Drain layers

Licensed drainlayers must be present at the time of installation of water and/or sewer mains into any home or building in Wilmington.

That is the rule. Last week the Water and Sewer commissioners affirmed the ruling.

A licensed drainlayer, they said, is the person who is physically responsible for the work being done, for any water or sewer work or installation. He must be present until there is proper backfill in the ditch.

The license is made out to an individual, not a company, and that individual must be present for any and all water and sewer work, the commissioners agreed.

Special meters for lawn sprinklers

Wilmington residents who have both water and sewer services at their homes, and who water their lawns more than "just a little" are paying for increased sewer services in their water bills. The sewer bill is computed on the amount of water consumed.

The water and sewer commissioners agreed last week that there should be a study on the subject.

A special meter, which could be termed "an agricultural meter" could be installed, and the home owner would not have to pay for extra sewer bills. But first there will have to be a study, to prevent any procedural errors.

Home owners are advised not to expect any change until the study has been completed.

Sons of Italy award

Richard G. Barletta, a recent graduate of Wilmington High School was presented with the Luigi Fiato Award at the recent scholarship banquet of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts of the Sons of Italy in America. Presenting the award is State President Angelo Furnari (left) and Scholarship Chairman Stephen Cozzaglio (right). Barletta ranked second in his graduating class of 171 and scored 690 in math. He was recognized for his excellence by receiving the Rensselaer Mathematics and Science award. He will be attending Northeastern University where he will be an accounting major.

Sons of Italy Scholarship banquet

The Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, Order of Sons of Italy in America, held its annual scholarship banquet recently at the Woburn Sons of Italy Hall. Stephen Cozzaglio of Lee, Chairman of the Scholarship Commission served as toastmaster for the awards program.

State President of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, Angelo Furnari of Roslindale, congratulated the 50 recipients on their outstanding scholastic achievements, and strongly encouraged them to further their educational efforts. He asked them to be proud of the fruition of the labors of their parents and grandparents and prove that they can carry on their Italian heritage into the world of today. He added that these young adults were selected from 500 applicants.

Guest speaker for the program was Attorney Leo S. Fama, II, a former scholarship recipient, who reminded the honorees that their first priority should be their studies. He added that it was an honor and pleasure to be the guest speaker for two reasons - to congratulate the 50 young men and women and to present a scholarship in memory of his grandfather, the late Joseph Fama.

Housing Authority to donate money to legal fund

by Arlene Surprenant

Members of the Wilmington Housing Authority agreed last week to donate $100 to a legal reserve fund held by National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials (NAHRO) despite some arguments saying such a move could further erode the authority's relationship with Executive Office of Communities and Development (EOCD).

According to Wilmington Housing Executive Director Ella Belmore, EOCD is requesting this year that any monies over the 100 percent level in local housing reserves be returned to the state. She said the action was taken because EOCD is cutting back and needs to come up with extra funds.

At the same time, NAHRO has requested local authorities to make donations to fill its coffers so it can pursue legal action on behalf of authorities when the need arises.

"I see no gain in giving them money," said WHA member Tom Siracusa. Belmore said, by sending a donation, the board would be protecting itself since the money could help fight EOCD's request for excess funds. The director argued the extra money should stay in local reserves to pay for housing maintenance and needed equipment.

Siracusa maintained if the WHA wants to continue building low cost homes, members have to get along with EOCD officials. He said it's obvious there is animosity between the state agency and the Wilmington Authority.

Dan Gillis disagreed, saying there was no animosity. He did, however, target the way EOCD conducts its business. As an example, Gillis said EOCD forced his board to accept a minority engineering firm to build scattered homes, a move which ended up costing the board considerably more money.

Michael Donovan said, in speaking to NAHRO's president, he was told it was important to present a united front. He said the legal fund gives authorities more leverage and provides a "cushion" when problems occur. He motioned to send a minimal amount to NAHRO and to also open dialogue with EOCD to try to improve relations with that agency. Siracusa said he could go along with the motion only if they include a cover letter explaining the funds are not to be construed as a legal directive against EOCD. The motion passed unanimously.

MWRA raises condemned

Representative Marianne Brenton joined a large number of State Representatives in filing a resolution to condemn the pay raises granted to the MWRA employees, many of whom already earn $60,000 or more.

"It is thoughtless, arrogant and irresponsible in this period of extremely hard times for this autonomous board to add to the financial burden of everyone - homeowners and businesses - in the MWRA district. Many state employees have gone without any raise for four years. This is the price we pay for the creation of a bureaucratic monster like the MWRA."

The legislature has no control over the spending of the MWRA. Their rates are not subject to any outside agency's approval. The current governing board, appointed by former Governor Michael Dukakis, will not have a vacancy until 1996.

by Kevin John Sowyrda

Some of Tewksbury's biggest political names gathered at an impromptu strategy meeting Tuesday evening to discuss the Zoning Board of Appeals (ZBA) rejection of a plan to build a Toyota dealership in Tewksbury. Key figures in the local government are upset with the ZBA giving the thumbs down, and in an unprecedented move appear to be working directly with the developer to salvage the project.

Auto dealer Herb Chambers' proposal would bring yet another dealership to the area, on land owned by John V. Sullivan. Sullivan would develop the Chambers project at Bob White's restaurant, formerly the Pike House.

An intriguing political story is unfolding as the newly constituted ZBA, born from the ashes of nearly two years of fierce development controversies, experiences serious political pressure for the first time. "I'd rather not comment on it all right now", said ZBA Chairman Walter Macial, conspicuous in his absence from the Tuesday night meeting.

Macial was not invited, but a July 11 letter from Town Manager David Cressman did invite Selectman Chairman Jay Kelley, Planning Director Sean Sullivan, Conservation Chairman Bill Hallisey and Planning Board Chairman Bob Fowler.

The town manager's letter reads, "Please be advised that a meeting has been scheduled in my office on the above referenced date (July 16, 7:00 p.m.) with John V. Sullivan to discuss the Toyota dealership proposal."

Sullivan, no relation to the Kevin Sullivan family, previously developed the Heartland Plaza and Fox Run. But his luck ran dry last winter when the ZBA voted against him, following stiff opposition from abutters.

"The neighborhood traffic is already bad and the dealership would have made things intolerable", said Robert Haines, a Main Street resident who actively fought Sullivan's project. Both Haines and his wife Elinor expressed surprise that officials were meeting with the developer, and said that neighbors should have been included. "I'm just finding out about this now", said Elinor Haines, asking "Why didn't they invite the residents and make it a public hearing?"

Cressman and Kelley's specific strategy here is unclear, but it is known that following ZBA rejection a project cannot be resubmitted for two years, unless it is determined by the local planning board that "substantial changes" have been made.

Speculation is that the Board of Selectmen could, in all legality, grant the requisite "class one auto license" pending a ZBA approval. The danger, is that by giving that green light the selectmen deliver a clear message to the ZBA and Planning Board that this project should be a go. The planning board is an elected membership, while the ZBA is appointed by the selectmen.

Selectman Chairman Jay Kelley would not comment on the Tuesday meeting and referred our questions to Town Manager David Cressman, who when asked if town officials had held such meetings with developers previously said, "not in my history".

"It was a meeting with Mr. Sullivan to discuss the proposal that had been presented to the town several months ago", said Cressman, who added that the ZBA was not invited so as to avoid an "... appearance that it was a meeting to try to bring any undue influence on the board of appeals." Cressman said the meeting was not official but "an informal gathering".

The significance of all this is the precedent being sent by the selectmen chairman and the town manager, holding a meeting directly with a developer rejected by the ZBA. If the intention is not to pressure the ZBA into reversing itself, then what are the intentions?

Briefly in Politics...

There'll be no time wasted in appointing a successor to Housing Authority Chairman David Fitzgerald who has moved to Haverhill. Selectmen Chairman Dan Ballou and Housing Authority Chairman Dan Gillis have agreed to a joint meeting Monday night to discuss and possibly appoint a successor. Dot Butler, sure to be a contender, was the unsuccessful candidate this spring having run a highly negative campaign against incumbent Joan Sadowski. But there is precedence for going with new faces.

Back in 1981 there was a vacancy on the Board of Selectmen when Aldo Cairra resigned in his third term to take up the presidency of the International Sons of Italy. Runner up from the previous election Barbara Sullivan was passed over for Mike Cairra, appointed to fill his father's seat. More recently, a vacancy on the school committee was filled by then finance committee member Brad Jackson, despite the fact that one contender, Phil Fenton, Sr., had lost the last election by a single vote.

Governor Weld's veto of the proposed exemption of "overlay accounts" from the restrictions of Proposition 2 1/2 means municipal leaders like Wilmington Town Manager Mike Cairra have three choices, including finding new money, making more cuts, or taking advantage of a new book keeping law. An outside section of the FY 1992 budget allows communities to defer one twelfth of the school teachers' salaries from the FY 92 accounts to FY 93. In layman's terms, next June's check to teachers will be delayed two weeks until after July first. In terms of bookkeeping towns will be able to balance their budgets this way, "but eventually it catches up with you, because it puts off the inevitable" said Town Manager Cairra.

Cairra received more bad news as the governor vetoed a proposed increase in the minimum excise tax bill, from $5.00 to $25.00, which would have produced an estimated $145,000 in additional revenues for the Wilmington coffers. The final budget picture from the governor's desk looks like a $667,000 decrease in local aid from last year.

Justice is a muddy business in Tewksbury. In the case of Town of Tewksbury vs. John J. Carey and Lois Carey, Superior Court Justice George A. O'Toole found out personally. The case had to do with whether or not the Careys could park an 18 wheel trailer dump truck on Livingston Street. John J. Carey is a down to earth guy, so much so that his business card reads, "Earth Merchant" (I'm not making this up). But the judge, who insisted on visiting the Carey's home, was not sympathetic and ruled in favor of Tewksbury, forcing the Careys to remove the vehicle. While inspecting the land, following the ardent stride of building inspector George Nawn, forever an athlete. His Honor, according to eyewitnesses, sank in a pit of mud, up to his robed knees.

The court fined the Careys $5,000 to be paid to their abutter Mrs. Slack, who lives at number 5 Brentwood Street. Court documents show that John Carey had been starting his diesel between 4:00 and 5:00 in the morning.

editorial

A matter of fairness

by Capt. Larz Neilson

There was a sudden flurry of excitement in Wilmington, last week, on questions of who should serve on the Board of Appeals. That board exists for the purpose of removing hardships which occasionally exist in ownership of land, and for some other reasons of zoning.

Wilmington has had an excellent board, over the years. The judgments have been excellent and the conduct of the board superior.

But the same persons have been on the board for a number of years, and this is a point which one Wilmington selectman finds to be unfair. Other persons he says probably as good in the exercise of judgment, find themselves excluded from serving.

If a Board of Appeals were to be elected, and if the members continued to be re-elected, those on the outside looking in could probably have no complaint.

By having no change in the appointment of members, is Wilmington being fair to those who would want to serve?

25 years ago

The July 21, 1966 edition of the Town Crier of Wilmington noted that:

Twenty-five town officials unanimously endorsed the idea of building the proposed new public library on the site of Rotary Park.

Mike Hanrahan pitched a one-hitter and Charlie Miller hit a four run homer to put Wilmington's Little League All Stars on top of Wakefield 8-1 in the first game of the CL Regional Playoffs.

Reports of some writers and commentators regarding the "carnage" on the highways during holiday weekends is just so much "Hokum." Considering all things, including the additional number of vehicles on the roads during holiday weekends, reports of unusually high death tolls are "essentially the work of lazy men who don't want to have to sit down and do some real thinking."

Officer Charles J. Dolan of the Wilmington Police Department was pictured accepting an award from the president of the New England Police Photographers Association. The award was presented each year to the Association member doing the most to further the group.

Lucci's Market was offering smoked shoulders for 38 cents a pound; five legged or breaded chickens, also 38 cents a pound and 10 of new potatoes, ...38 cents.

letters to the editor

Dear Larz:

The attached letter has been sent to Reps. Brenton, Miceli, Krekorian and Sen. Buell.

I would urge those who support education in Wilmington, particularly parents, to also contact these individuals to express their support for this issue.

Dear

I am writing to urge you to overturn the governor's veto of two specific portions of the FY1992 budget. One is the exemption for the overlay appropriation; the other granting the cities and towns the right to increase the automobile excise tax. Without the funds from these two areas I am faced with the elimination of twenty-one direct service positions (teachers and counselors). I will have first grade classes of 31 or 32, and my overall population will necessitate general class size increases approaching 30 at all levels. These cuts will make a total of 64 administrative, teacher, clerical and support staff reductions over the past three budgets.

It's time to stop talking about supporting education. It's time to support it.

I hope the 2,850 children in the Wilmington Public Schools can count on your support.

We will all be watching with great interest the upcoming debate.

Sincerely,
William J. Fay, Jr.
Superintendent of Schools

Dear Larz:

Having spent another morning repairing my mailbox that has been vandalized five times over the past years, and again last evening by three youths, I wonder what motivates these young men to do this stupid destruction.

Does it make them 'macho' with their friends, or is it a result of drinking or drugs? Do they brag to their parents who think they know what they are doing in wandering through the streets late at night looking for "excitement"?

I feel their talents should be directed in some more productive manner rather than in destroying the community in which they live.

Sincerely,
Name Withheld

The Reed family

The Reed family of Jones Avenue, Wilmington is the grateful recipient of a considerable amount of donated work and materials on their home, to modify it for handicapped accessibility for their son Jonathan, severely disabled from a medication reaction when he was an infant. Mark and Ruth Reed are shown with their children, Daniel, Jonathan, Becky and David.

Reed family offers thanks

Our family would like to thank everyone for all the hard work, time and generous donations that have gone into putting a wonderful addition on our home. Without the remarkable and loving response from so many people this project would have never been able to happen.

Everyone has shown so much love and support for our son to stay in our home that we can only say thank you all.

We had three successful fund raising dances, which with other contributions have allowed us to complete this project. The most recent dance was on Friday, April 12. The Sons of Italy in Wilmington and the D.J.'s of "Heart and Soul" were so kind to donate for this event. We received alot of donations for raffles from many family, friends and neighbors. Other contributions were received from Royal Dynasty, Birch Super Drug, Dunkin Donuts, Designs by Don and Gemcraft Ltd, in Lowell Thank you everyone.

Joe Langone from Northeastern Development led the whole project from the beginning through the end. He has been so wonderful and has had all Special people behind him. We'd like to thank everyone for all your devotion into our family, because of this generosity our son Jonathan has adapted wonderfully to his new surroundings.

Love to you all,
Mark and Ruth Reed and family

Creative Arts seeks new director

Creative Arts in Reading will be looking for a new executive director when Cheryl Weber leaves this position in August. Ms. Weber has been with the organization for three years and will be leaving because of family obligations. During her three years, Ms. Weber has accomplished many changes at Creative Arts. She has worked to make the organization into a regional arts center which annually draws nearly a 1000 students from over 35 communities north of Boston. She has been responsible for enriching the cultural life of this community through bringing in performing groups such as the Ballet Theatre of Boston for the Nutcracker, Irish musicians from Greater Boston and other guest artists which have entertained the public. In addition, Ms. Weber has maintained the standards of high quality art and music education which Creative Arts is noted for throughout this area. She will be missed by staff, faculty and the community.

Creative Arts was established in 1977 by a group of Reading parents who wanted to provide additional cultural enrichment for their children. It began by offering art classes after school to only a handful of students and grew to be a thriving arts center with more than 40 faculty members. Currently located in the First Congregational Church in Reading, the vision of a few parents has grown into a reality where families and individuals can learn, exhibit, perform and enjoy the arts within their own community. Now, more than ever, community arts centers are needed to supplement the declining fine arts programs within the schools.

Creative Arts is noted for its outstanding Suzuki string and piano program and its professional faculty of music instructors on all instruments. The art program offers classes in most visual arts disciplines for all ages and presents many events throughout the year which families from all over attend.

It's only temporary

In last week's column I said the chairman and vice chairman of the Commission of Elder Services were voted into office. That was an error on my part, the two commissioners mentioned were named to the office temporarily. At the next meeting of the commissioners the election of officers will take place.

Nurse checkups Thursday

The nurse will be at the Center Thursday to check blood pressures and give diabetes tests, starting at 1 p.m. If you have not had your sugar level tested for some time, it would be wise to do so on Thursday. With the summer months upon us, we will get a little lax about our eating habits. Those ice cream sundaes, frappes and banana splits look so good. If you have diabetes they are forbidden. Diabetes is one of those illnesses that can be active in our bodies unknown to us. So before you start to indulge yourself in the deserts of summer have the nurse check you for diabetes. It will take only a few minutes of your time.

Hearing aid specialist

The hearing aid specialist will be at the Center Friday morning from 10 to noon. He will be testing the hearing of seniors and hearing aids for proficiency. Both of these medical clinics are free to any resident 60 years of age or older. If you are a shut-in and would like these tests taken in your home, call the Center at 657-7595 or 658-2258.

Senior picnic

The senior picnic will be held in the Buzzell Senior Citizen Center Friday July 19 starting at noon. The meal will be barbecued chicken, potato and tossed salad. Chowder, ice cream sundaes, coffee and cakes. Music for dancing will be provided, after dinner is served, by the Big Band Sounds of Chet Hamden.

August social

The therapeutic social for August will be a dinner dance in the Tewksbury/Wilmington Elks hall on Friday, August 9. A roast beef dinner with all trimmings will be served at seven. Music for dinner and dancing will be by Chet Hamden. Sign up for this social will begin at 9:30 Monday July 22. A $4 non-refundable deposit will be required when you sign up to help defray the cost of the social. The same procedure as in past socials will be adhered to at this one. You will be assigned a table number. We will begin with number one, that will be filled as we sign up, then number two and so on until all tables are filled. We will have a cutoff date to allow the caterer enough time to order the food.

Significant change

In 1990 there was a significant change in the way earnings effect Social Security benefits for people 65 and older. Because of this change a number of people who otherwise would not have been eligible for benefits can now receive some money from Social Security.

If you are between the age of 65 and 69, you can earn up to $9,720 in 1991 and get all your Social Security benefits. For every $3 you earn over that amount $1 is withheld from your benefits. Before the change in the law, it was for every $2. For those under 65 the withholding rate is still $1 for each $2 in earnings. Over 70 the earnings limits do not apply.

If you would like to find out if you can receive benefits this year call the Social Security office at 1-800-234-5772. They will process your claims over the phone for you.

Complaint issued for providing liquor

A Woburn District Court magistrate on Monday issued complaints against Archangelo and Liliana DiCenso of Fletcher Lane, Wilmington charging them with providing liquor to minors.

The charges stem out of an incident at the Wilmington High School senior prom on May 29 at the Danversport Yacht Club. At the prom, their son Davide DiCenso became ill. In the stated opinion of high school principal Paul Fleming, he was drunk.

Fleming suspended DiCenso from all school activities, including graduation. Mrs. DiCenso had an attorney go to U.S. District Court in Boston and get an injunction requiring school officials to allow Davide to participate in the graduation.

Davide and three other students who had been suspended all graduated with their class.

Since then, Wilmington police have been developing information leading the the charges. Police charge that Mr. and Mrs. DiCenso served alcoholic beverages not only to their son but to his friends as well.

Police summoned several witnesses to Monday's closed hearing, including students, school administrators and former school committee chairman Dr. Schirley Callan.

Flower shop blooms with a familiar face

Twenty years of friendship has begat a new business relationship. Don Hill and Charlie Glavin are now under one roof at 319 Main St. Both have been around Wilmington for decades, running their own businesses. They are both members of the Friendship Masonic Lodge.

When Don wasn't busy managing the Cumberland Farms store he did floral arrangements, mostly for weddings. Two years ago he opened Designs by Don as a retail operation on Main St.

Charlie Glavin has been running King's Jewelry for as long as anyone can remember, having taken the reigns from his father-in-law when Mr. King retired and moved to Florida.

During the past winter, however, the death of Mr. King threw the business into a turmoil and Charlie was forced to close the store. Many long-time customers were shocked to find the door bolted when they needed Charlie to repair their favorite watch or wanted to buy a present for a loved one.

Now Charlie is back. He has commandeered a corner of Don's store and is accepting watch repair work and can order custom jewelry. Anyone who is acquainted with either of these men will remark on their sense of humor. A friendly tease about something is always in order when you meet either man. Now they're both at the same place ... all day long.

Seek to resurrect funds for autistic home

Two of Wilmington's legislators assured members of the Wilmington Housing Authority last week they would try to set up a meeting with the new secretary of Executive Office of Communities and Development (EOCD) to try to resurrect grant money to build a home for autistic children. Rep. Jim Miceli and Rep. Marianne Brenton offered their help to get the project back on track. Other legislators will also be sent letters seeking their help and input.

The idea for the home was first brought to the authority's attention by the May Institute six years ago. Since then, EOCD nixed the choice of a site on Houghton Road and the May Institute withdrew its support and decided to build elsewhere.

Dan Gillis, at Miceli's suggestion, contacted a group from Andover who are trying to convert a building at Tewksbury Hospital into a home for autistic and handicapped children. Gillis' suggestion is to take at least part of the $400,000 or so grant and turn it over to the group. He said such a home could help at least two Wilmington families, who journey to Cape Cod weekly to visit their children in another home.

Miceli praised the board for their willingness to take a positive approach in solving the problem. He suggested going back to "square one" and taking an aggressive approach to make the home a reality. Brenton said since the WHA doesn't actually have the grant in hand, members should track down the current whereabouts of the funds.

Bay State Games begin Thursday

The 10th anniversary Bay State Games, Massachusetts' own Olympic sports festival, will open July 18 when 4,500 of the state's top amateur athletes begin four days of medalist competition with over 600 events in 15 sports.

Nearly 11,000 athletes took on the challenge of the '91 Games. Now, after a month of tryouts and weeks of practice, the finalists will come from every corner of the state to share the special experience of the largest multi-sport event in New England, hosted by Harvard and M.I.T.

"This could be the most talented group ever to compete at the Games," said Games sport coordinator, Kevin Cumings. "We have a few Men's Open Basketball teams that could challenge any team in the Big East."

Despite the financial struggle to keep the Games alive, all sports events of the '91 Games are free to the public. Arnot added "We know first hand how difficult this year has been for a lot of people in the

At the Eastern's, he ran a leg on Bentley's 1600 meter relay team that finished fifth with a time of 3:31.8.

A computer information systems major, Smith graduated from Wilmington High School in 1987. He is the son of Barbara Smith of Englewood Drive, Wilmington.

Hair is the Total You

SMOOTH TALK

According to a survey commissioned by a major razor blade manufacturer, women are more likely to shave daily during summer months than in winter. Specifically, three times as many women between the ages of 18 and 34 shave daily in the summer as do in the winter. During colder months, 27 percent of those surveyed see fit to shave only weekly, versus 12 percent in the summer. With the warm weather, 36 percent of the women shave every day, while 43 percent shave two or three times a week. Particular points of irritation to these women are shaving the bikini line and sunburned legs (which should be avoided). What the study failed to point out is that waxing in a beauty salon eliminates the need to shave at all, and the results are longer lasting.

Shaving also produces hair that is thicker and coarser than hair that is removed by waxing. For all your beauty needs from head to toe, stop in or call us at SHAWSHEEN HAIR SALON, 161 Shawsheen Ave., Rt. 129, Wilmington, (508) 658-9475. Hours: open six days and nights of the week, closed Sunday. Ask about our Matrix skin care products for firmer, younger and healthier looking skin. M/C and Visa are welcome.

Pam's back and looking forward to seeing her clients. Call and schedule an appointment today.

HINT: Shaving against the direction of hair growth creates skin sensitivity and ingrown hairs in many women.

Crappie are biting in July

by Bill Conlon
WHAP! Why didn't I think of that before?

A useful lesson in summertime fishing was given me last week by a stranger, to whom I'm grateful.

With a few hours to kill Thursday night, I slipped the boat into Peter's Pond in Dracut for a sunset cruise.

At the ramp, however, was a guy who pulled in to let his partner do a minor repair job on his electric boat motor. Naturally, I started in to shmoozing ...

"Gettin' any?" I asked, which is an angler's hello, and not what you dirty-minded folks are thinking.

"A few," he replied.

"Any size to 'em?" I asked, fully expecting to tales of bass caught and lost.

"Well, they're not bad for crappie but I haven't tried the bass yet."

POING!! My right eyebrow went up, the left one down. Crappie? In July? Can't be. The crappie are on the surface, merrily spawning, in late April. But after the spawn run is done, or about the time the lilacs bloom, the crappie head for deeper waters.

But the guy pulled the lid off his bucket and showed me a half-dozen "eating size" calico.

In July! Can you beat that?

"How in the hell are you catching crappie in July?" I just had to ask.

Deep, was the response. He said the slabs were belting tiny spinners and jigs in the deepest holes on the pond. With no depth finder in his boat, he was guessing at the shape of the pond bottom, while I could list the features from memory.

Bidding him adieu, I headed out.

Bass fishing was terribly slow, so

I headed for deeper water, to see if he was serious.

He was. The crappie were hitting fast and furious, in the deepest spots on the pond.

Amazing.

I dragged a tiny pink jig along the bottom, and within minutes I was rewarded with a fat half-pounder.

In July! No kidding, eh?

The remaining minutes before the sun went down were spent dragging tiny lures across the bottom, feeling for the wiggling hit of crappie. The fast action came to a halt at dark, but for awhile I was nailing crappie, my favorite eating fish, in heat of summer. Well, I'll be ...

Only on scattered occasions have I scored while fishing deep in fresh water, and those times were during ice fishing seasons. I'd always felt that deep water was mostly dead in summer, with all the fish moving to the shallows to feed on the countless crawly things there.

The crappie, however, take long summer vacations. They disappear in the dog days.

It never dawned on me to look for crappie deep in the summertime.

How dumb. The water is coldest in the deeps, and cold-loving fish, like crappie, probably thrive in the dark, murky deeps. What I thought was a "sterile" abyss is instead alive with fish, big crappie no less, in the heat of the summer.

Why didn't I think of that before? The crappie don't board a plane and spend the summer in the Yukon, for cryin' out loud, so just they've got to be somewhere in the pond.

They like it cold, so why not look in the coldest spot? Down deep? It makes sense, now that I think about it. Of course, a little success does wonders for the thought process.

And there they were. The crappie that provide so much fun in spring-time, and so many fish dinners, are still here. They're just hiding, and actively feeding, where the sun doesn't shine.

But sadly for the crappie, they've been discovered. I'll be back, with a hungry vengeance. Due to family problems, I was unable to stuff my freezer with crappie this spring. I'll correct that situation presently.

Oh, and thanks for the tip, buddy. If I'd gotten your name that night, you'd be reading it here.

See what happens when you chat with strangers? You can learn the niftiest stuff!

Volleyball league

A Wilmington volleyball league is forming for Wilmington residents. There will be two divisions, a 30 and over/ and an open division.

Burlington's Special Unit

Handling Hazardous Materials

By DOUGLAS WOOD-BOYLE

The Burlington Fire Department was faced with two incidents dealing with hazardous materials in a two week period about four years ago and has since turned those into the formation of one the most complete Special Hazard Units in the area.

The first incident was at Burlington High School and the second involved the Town's Water Treatment Plant.

Assistant Chief Leo Pouliot decided at that time that the town needed to follow the lead of neighboring Woburn. He put together a 16-man unit with four-man teams on each shift, that is trained to deal pro-actively with almost any dangerous situation that could result from a fire, chemical spill or other accident.

"I think this Hazardous Material team and this unit is one of the best in the world," Pouliot said.

The decision has turned out to be a good one as the unit has recently answered an average of one response a week since May 18.

Pouliot said that last year the team answered about 40 responses the whole year.

"We are well over the total for last year right now," Pouliot said.

He estimated that his men have answered between 40 and 45 since the start of the year.

It is not that Burlington is an especially dangerous town. Pouliot and Firefighter Stephen Yetman explained a combination of factors exist. They include the number of industries in the town as well as its situation relative to major transportation routes.

The same factors are in Woburn which set up their unit about seven months before Burlington.

Yetman noted that the Woburn decision came following an incident that sent 17 firefighters to the hospital.

"The local officials (in both communities) recognized we did not have the ability to handle (these incidents) and did something about it," he said.

Yetman and fellow team member Firefighter Ed McLean noted that the responses are on two levels and are not always the most serious type.

Yetman said "The official definition of a hazardous material situation is when something escapes from a container and hurts or harms what it touches. I would say it is 'The chemical potential for something to hurt people or property.'"

Level One can be handled by any member of the department. This is due to a law that was written following a 1981 incident in the MBTA train yards in Somerville.

At that time no hazardous material unit had been established

Our far-flung correspondent has made his annual summer relocation to Newport, R.I. The following is the first of several reports to be filed from there:

The gray-haired, slightly paunchy Rhode Island state trooper called the incident "something right out of 'The Twilight Zone'." It began on the morning of July 4th. Susan, John, Chuck, Chuck's girlfriend, Tanya, and I were driving along Rte. 114, in Portsmouth, heading toward downtown Newport. Susan drove, I rode shotgun, while Chuck, Tanya and John sat in the backseat. The weatherman had been wrong about his prediction of lousy weather that day; by eleven o'clock a thick haze had burned off, and the sun shined brightly against a brilliant blue sky. The temperature rose lazily into the upper seventies, prompting us to keep all the windows down, rather than opting to keep them closed in order to benefit from the air conditioner.

IT'S NOT A SPACEMAN it is Burlington Firefighter Steve Yetman demonstrating the special equipment used by the Town's Hazmat Team when dealing with dangerous chemicals. In the background the HazMat truck is equipped with all the materials needed to deal with the unique emergency situations the team can come up against. The rear portion of the truck is set up to act as a mobile command post complete with a small library of instructions on how to handle various chemicals. (Don Young photo)

Six week fitness through the child-bearing years course

Fitness Through the Child-bearing Year, a six-week exercise class for pregnant women, will be offered by New England Memorial Hospital (NEMH) in Stoneham beginning August 1, from 7 to 8:30 p.m. Classes are small, with no more than 10 participants, allowing for individual attention.

Run by a registered physical therapist, the course will include short lectures on the benefits of pre-natal exercise, anatomy, body mechanics, posture and nutrition. The exercises were developed by the physical therapy and OB/GYN departments at NEMH to help women get in shape for labor and delivery and to stay in shape after the baby is born. The class focuses on gently toning and stretching. Relaxation techniques are also taught. Once a woman has gone through the program she is welcome to return to future classes at no additional charge. This class complements but does not substitute for early and natural childbirth classes offered by NEMH's Rigby Maternity Center.

Participants must pre-register and have a physician's permission before beginning the program. The cost for the six weeks is $30. Classes are held in the physical therapy gym on the subground level of the hospital. The program will be offered again beginning September 12. For additional information and forms, call Nancy Spurio, R.P.T., in the NEMH Physical Therapy Department at (617) 979-7125.

Dr. Brown joins Winchester

Winchester Hospital is proud to announce the appointment of Jeffrey S. Brown, M.D., to the hospital's Medical and Dental Staff. Dr. Brown is an Ear, Nose and Throat doctor and will be joining the practice of Drs. Roy Johnson and Thomas Mulvaney.

Prior to his appointment at Winchester Hospital, Dr. Brown received his residency training in Otolaryngology/Head and Neck surgery in the combined Otolaryngology training program at Boston University Medical Center and Tufts University. He completed his surgery internship at Beth Israel Hospital in Boston and received his medical degree from the University of Pittsburgh Medical School, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Cosmetic surgery popular for men

Men are increasingly using cosmetic surgery to improve their appearance, according to a recent membership survey by the American Academy of Cosmetic Surgery (AACS).

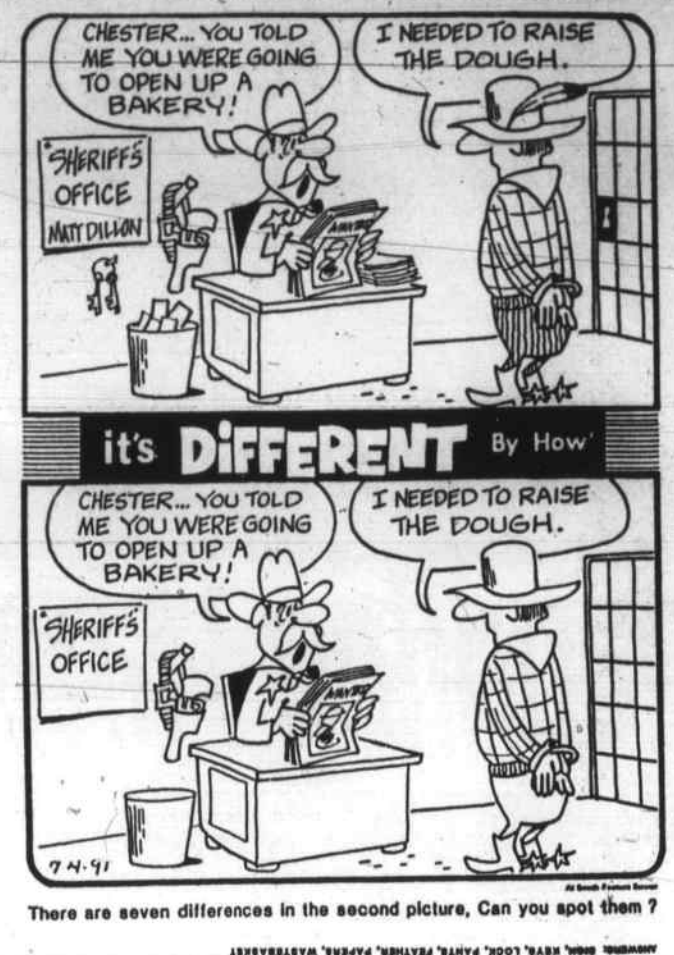

Figures for 1990 reveal that the three most popular procedures performed on males were hair replacement, rhinoplasty (nose correction) and blepharoplasty (eye lift). The estimated number of procedures performed by AACS members in 1990 were hair replacement, 28,000; rhinoplasty, 30,000 and blepharoplasty, 28,000.

The survey also indicated that males continue to comprise about 30% of the total number of people having cosmetic surgery. And the reason? AACS President Thomas Alt, M.D., a cosmetic surgeon who specializes in hair replacement, states that, "Our society today is more health-conscious than ever before. People are dieting, exercising and responding to the urging of organized medicine to live a more fit life physically and mentally.

But there is more here than meets the eye. Larry Schoenrock M.D., a cosmetic surgeon and president-elect of the AACS, suggests that some males feel the need to compete with younger, more energetic males in today's marketplace.

An additional factor in the increasing percentage of males opting for cosmetic surgery may be the advent of financing which is now being offered by many of the AACS member surgeons.

For free brochures or further information about cosmetic surgery, the public may contact the AACS' toll-free Cosmetic Surgery Information Service at 1-800-221-9808.

It's Yard Sale Season

NORTH READING RESIDENTS PEGGY AND KEITH TOOHEY inspect this "find" at a yard sale on North Street in North Reading. It's a wicker feather basket. Yard sale season is in full bloom in all the local communities. (Don Young photo)

About the towns

By PHYLLIS NISSEN
MAY THE FORCE BE WITH YOU, OR LET'S HEAR IT FOR THOSE READING POLICE - We have recently heard from several social workers who customarily work with several police departments that the Reading police are outstanding in their cooperation with those involved in providing social services and their concern for youths in need.

BURLINGTON - "I am a Town Meeting member and was interested in what you had to say about the Burlington Mall changes," writes Anne E. Rowe, of Burlington.

"I would like to point out to

A weekly bath for your pool

Suntan oil. Perspiration. Invisible bacteria. Algae. These are only some of the contaminants that invade your pool during the swimming season.

In addition to water chemistry, experts now feel that a weekly shock treatment is a necessary part of preventive pool care.

"Shock treatments were originally developed as problem solvers, to remedy algae and bacteria build up and offset the effects of excessive heat, heavy bather use and heavy rain," says Dr. R. Neil Lowry, an independent consulting chemist to government and industry in the area of pool and spa water maintenance. "To put this in perspective, daily chlorination is like washing one's hands and face, and a weekly shock treatment is like taking a shower or bath. I strongly recommend that a shock treatment be part of a weekly pool care routine to prevent pool water problems rather than just a remedial procedure when problems arise."

It's important that you have a shock treatment that both sanitizes your pool, ridding it of invisible bacteria and algae, and oxidizes the pool, making the water sparkling clear. Be sure to read product labels. One tip off is that shock treatments that allow you to swim immediately after use are products that oxidize only and do not kill bacteria and algae.

you in the hope that you will publicize it that Burlington has an excellent and cheap mini bus service as has Lexington and Bedford. The MBTA also serves the mall. One need not travel by car.

"I am not defending the mall as I am very much annoyed at their lack of cooperation regarding public transportation and the publicizing and coordinating of these services. I find this inexcusable."

"Please publicize our mini bus. P. S. Perhaps they will soon ask for an expensive, money-making parking garage instead!"

SENIOR CENTER - Somerset Nursing Home's Ron Deletetsky, Coordinator of Volunteer Services, urges you to consider making a "tremendous" difference by becoming a volunteer in a nursing home.

And Somerset Adult Day Coordinator Thea Gaudette points out that whatever your druthers, the folks at Somerset or at any other local nursing home can find a way to make them happen.

"Visiting those that have few family visitors brings joy into lonely lives and shortens long days," says Deletetsky. "Join a friendly visitors program where you will be carefully matched with residents to ensure great visits."

"Help run a resident's store. Bring cards, small gifts, candy and toiletries to those who are room-bound. It brings a touch of the outside world to them and lets them have the dignity of selecting their own toiletries, gifts and cards."

"Do you enjoy reading? There are many residents who love books, but are no longer able to read and would love to be read to."

"Do you love doing crafts? There are many people who would love to work on crafts but need one-on-one assistance. Your hands and encouragement can help them to succeed. Also, there are many people who have no families and never receive birthday presents. Your handmade gifts would thrill them."

Above are only a few of the ways you can make a major difference in someone's life. More are available through Deletetsky and Gaudette at (617)942-1210. More here later, as space permits.

And we always welcome your input.

Handling Hazardous Materials

on any level, and several firefighters became seriously injured while breathing noxious fumes.

Now every piece of fire apparatus carries basic hazardous material protection equipment.

Yetman noted that under the state law all firefighters had to be first responder operational by March, 1990.

"Our firefighters were already up and running by then," he said proudly.

Pouliot noted that another function of the special unit is to provide the basic in-house training needed to keep the rest of the department certified.

Because of this the regular firefighters can respond to the level one incident and take defensive actions. This might include assessing whether a Level Two incident is involved and then start evacuation procedures.

The second type of response is Level Two and that is when the specially trained team of hazardous material technicians come in and don their protective gear turning them into Earth based versions of spacemen. The suit is completely self-contained and airtight.

The unit has responded to six of those level incidents since May 18.

The first was at Schaal Associates. The incident was called in when oil was noticed leaking from an underground fuel tank.

It was discovered that a pipe feeding overhead heaters in the building had broken. However, the thermostat kept calling for heat and the machinery kept pumping the oil.

Another incident occurred at Burlington High School. Unlike the one four years previous, the department was now able to handle it.

The incident had started out as a fire in a storage room.

However, the heat of the fire melted the plastic containers that stored regular household chemicals such as ammonia, bleach and drain cleaners.

These chemicals then mixed with the water and with each other causing noxious fumes.

The unit was able to get into the room, separate the materials and then apply a neutralizing agent.

Another incident occurred on Mall Road when a rubbish truck caught on fire.

The unit was called in when it was discovered that the truck was hauling trash that included several different types of pesticides and acids.

A fourth incident had the potential of being the most dangerous.

The unit was called to a local company when a box of pharmaceuticals that had been misdirected to the company broke. The drugs mixed together.

A further potential of danger was added because it was not known what the drugs were as they were labeled in a foreign language and misspelled.

McLean said in a case like that you can ask a chemist and he can identify the reaction to be expected of a particular substance, but not what might happen when mixed with something else.

Yetman noted the materials involved in the High School incident and said they were materials found in any house, hardware store, or pool supply store.

To deal with these incidents each hazardous material technician receives a minimum of 200 hours of training.

Yetman noted that some members of the Burlington team have had as many as 600 hours of training and they meet once a month for extra sessions.

The training comes from the National Fire Academy, the Massachusetts Fire Academy, the federal Environmental Protection Agency, the Massachusetts Coalition of Occupational Safety and Health and courses at Middlesex College.

Pouliot added that many local companies invite members of the team to take courses that are provided by those companies.

A case of this will be an upcoming session to be held at General Electric.

Pouliot added that companies like MaCom are always inviting members of the department to tour the facility and become familiar with it.

Aside from the training the Town has provided the Department with a 1987 truck set up in several sections. The truck sections all have roll-up doors and are used to store the equipment ranging from protective gear to oxygen bottles. The truck also carries several various types of absorption equipment, booms, ladders, neutralizing agents and decontamination equipment.

The last is the first item set up before an operation starts.

Pouliot said "If people get hurt and you don't have a decontamination center set up, the hospitals won't want to take them in and the ambulance would also become contaminated."

The decontamination equipment is actually fairly simple. It consists of three rubber wading pools, very much like the ones toddlers use in their back yards.

A shower unit is set up with soap and water and whatever neutralizing agent might be needed.

The truck is also loaded with a mobile communications unit and a library of texts on all different types of chemicals and other hazardous materials.

Back at the station, the dispatchers, such as Ellen Carpenter, also receive training in various computer programs needed to relay information to the team in the field.

Yetman said at some point the ideal would be to equip the truck with a fax machine and a computer modem.

Each incident takes a minimum of 12-people on the scene. These include the HazMat team leader, safety person and liaison, Operations leader, the communications person and the science and research person.

Next in the chain are the Decontamination team of at least three people and the entry team. This team consists of a leader, two entry people and two back-up personnel. Also needed are a support person for each member of the entry team and two medical people.

Pouliot said "A HazMat incident is not like regular firefighting. It is long and time consuming."

"First you have to identify what you have, then establish a plan of attack," he said.

In comparison Pouliot likens regular firefighting to just kicking the door in and attacking.

One advantage the communities have in taking on the extra expense, is that state law allows the department to collect from the responsible party any and all costs associated with the incident.

Pouliot added that all of his men do their training on their own time out side of regular shift schedules.

He also noted that both Burlington and Woburn have spent many hours at incidents in other communities.

Aside from these two units Hanscom Air Force Base also has a team as does the Boston Fire Department.

The state also provides a Metro Fire District HazMat Team that Yetman also works with.

CHOLESTEROL SCREENINGS AT WINCHESTER

Why should your cholesterol level be checked? Because cholesterol has been linked to heart disease, the leading cause of death in the U.S. And because one in every three Americans over the age of 20 has a cholesterol level high enough to require medical treatment.

How often should your cholesterol level be checked? At least once a year. And if your cholesterol level is high, you should be screened at least every six months.

Winchester Hospital is offering cholesterol screenings to the public on August 14th from 4 to 6 p.m., at Winchester Hospital in the admitting area, and continues to offer screenings the second Wednesday of each month. For prices and further information, call the Education Department at Winchester Hospital (617) 756-2220.

"CONCORD TEA PARTY TOUR"

The "Concord Tea Party Tour," a two-hour, two-mile walking tour of historic Concord will begin on Saturday, July 20. Groups will start on the front porch of the Colonial Inn, Monument Square, at 2 p.m. ever afternoon except Tuesday and 9:30 a.m. Monday and Saturday mornings. Led by Concord resident and registered Concord Tour Guide, Paula I. Robbins, the tours will end up with tea and Concord Teacakes in the garden of her Victorian home in the center of town. Arrangements may also be made for groups to return to the Colonial Inn for lunch or for tea, served daily from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m.

Modeled after a similar tour which has been given in Charleston, South Carolina for seven years, the tour will focus on 19th century Concord and its contributions to American culture. Robbins will not duplicate information or sites already covered by the Concord Museum, Orchard House, Thoreau Lyceum, Old Manse, Emerson House, the Wayside, or Minuteman National Historical Park.

However, she will provide information about many of the homes and buildings connected with Emerson, Thoreau, Hawthorne and their circle, as well as the Abolitionist Movement.

Robbins, who first moved to the area 29 years ago, has always been a history buff, minoring in history at Vassar, where she received a B.A. in English. For Concord's 350th anniversary in 1985, she organized a lecture series offered by Concord-Carlisle Adult and Community Education on Concord's role in the history of American education.

The fee for the Concord Tea Party is $15 for adults and $5 for children. Reservations are required and can be made by phoning (508) 369-1430. Robbins is also available for groups.

NOMINATIONS FOR AUDUBON AWARDS

The Massachusetts Audubon Society is seeking nominations for this year's Audubon A and Conservation Teacher of the Year Awards, to be presented by the Society in November.

The Audubon A Award recognizes citizens, legislators, organizations, communities and businesses who show outstanding commitment and action in solving environmental problems. Such action can come in the form of professional work in the legislative, business or media fields, or volunteer or other work performed by citizens of the Commonwealth.

"Public awareness of environmental issues has seen a surge in recent years, and there are more individuals and organizations than ever who have made a truly exceptional commitment," noted Gerard A. Bertrand, president of Massachusetts Audubon.

Last year, the Audubon A was presented to Green Seal Chairman Denis Hayes, the Coalition for the Cape Cod Commission Act, Paula Zigouras of Carver, Veryfine Products, Inc. and North Shore Sunday.

The Conservation Teacher of the Year Award recognizes excellence in environmental education in the Commonwealth's schools. Last Year, Mark Blazis of Auburn Middle School and Robert Gray of Bourne High School were honored with the award.

The Society is asking for Audubon A nominations in four categories: Businesses or Corporation, Citizen Action, Legislation and Media. Conservation Teacher of the Year nominations can fall into the elementary or secondary education categories.

The awards will be presented at the Society's annual meeting on November 7 at the Harvard Club on Commonwealth Avenue in Boston.

Anyone who would like to make an Audubon A Award nomination, call Faye Rapoport or Holly Spouta at (617) 259-9500 to receive a nomination form. The deadline is Friday, August 16. Conservation Teacher of the Year nomination forms can be obtained from the Society's Education Department at the same number (deadline September 15).

CAREER COUNSELING AT MIDDLESEX

Middlesex Community College offers two comprehensive programs designed to assist adults with career choice and direction. Participants can explore career interests through a personalized testing and counseling program.

"In this difficult employment market it is even more important for individuals to assess themselves and consider how their skills will transfer to several different careers," reports MCC

Career Counselor Esther Hochman. She administers the individualized career planning and testing program and will assist students in determining an appropriate testing program.

The Quest program includes two hours of career counseling as well as administration and interpretation of the Harrington O'Shea Decision Making Inventory. This vocational interest inventory is designed to survey interests, values, abilities and career plans in order to make educational and/or career choices.

CAPS, the California Aptitude Preference Survey, is a series of aptitude tests designed to help identify strengths and weaknesses. The test results are correlated to related career fields and can assist in the selection of school courses and training programs.

For more information on the counseling program, please call Ms. Hochman at (617) 272-7342, Ext. 3240 or (508) 937-5454, Ext. 3240.

BACKPACKING AND RAFTING ALASKA

On Thursday, July 18, REI will sponsor a clinic about backpacking and rafting Alaska's Brooks Range. Starting in the central Brooks range, Tom Ballantyne and his friend Glendon Brienk travelled north toward the Arctic Ocean for a month of adventure. In a land rich with wildlife, encountering wolves, caribou and grizzly bear was a common occurrence.

All evening clinics, free and open to the public, begin at 7 p.m. and are held at REI, 279 Salem St. (exit 40 off Rte. 128), Reading. For more information call (617) 944-5103.

WALKING CLUBS MAKING STRIDES

On Tuesday, March 26th, SportsAid, The Malden Hospital's center for sports medicine, hosted a lecture entitled "How and Why to Exercise." This was the first in a series of programs to encourage individuals to make regular exercise part of their lifestyle. Since then SportsAid has held two Walking Demonstrations, a motivational lecture, and most recently, a night of health screenings.

At the "Night of Screenings" members of the walking club were tested for the following: cholesterol, blood pressure, flexibility, body fat and height and weight. These readings were recorded on walking cards which are used to track the progress of target heart rates during an exercise program. "Among the screenings conducted, cholesterol and blood pressure are probably the most important," stated Linda Moody, SportsAid Manager. "These can alert an individual to cardiac risk factors and help them to address a problem if one exists."

Kathy Desimone and Camella Nelson, both of Malden, first met at SportsAid's Walking Demonstration where they learned the proper techniques for warming up, working toward a target heart

RESIDENTIAL APPRAISER EDUCATION PROGRAM

The Massachusetts Association of Realtors (MAR) will offer a 75-hour Residential Appraisal Education Program developed by the National Association of Realtors during the months of July and August for individuals interested in becoming licensed real estate appraisers in Massachusetts. The program, which is being co-sponsored by the Greater Lawrence Board of Realtors, consists of five separate courses each of which will be held over a two-day period at the Gr. Lawrence Board of REALTORS office, 258 Broadway, Methuen.

Each course includes 15 hours of classroom instruction covering the fundamental concepts of appraisal, and all attendees will receive a student handbook and copies of overhead visuals for each module to assist them in studying for the state appraisal exam.

The schedule for the Residential Appraisal Education Program is as follows: Course I: The Basics of Appraisal, July 22 and 24; Course II: Real Estate Analysis, July 31 and August 1; Course III: Sales Comparison Approach, August 7 and 8; Course IV: Cost and Income Approaches, August 14 and 15; and Course V: Appraisal Standards and Ethics, July 10 and 11 and August 28 and 29. Each day's program will be held from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Tuition for each individual course is $125 for MAR members and $175 for non-members. MAR members may register in advance for the complete five course package at a cost of $525. School notes

by phyllis nissen

—Approximately 6,000 people - mostly kids - recently raised $13,000 at Stoneham High's second annual Springfest, run by SHS students and faculty at the Stoneham High football field.

Activities began early on a Friday evening and were in full swing until about 9 p.m., and after $3,000 went toward expenses, the rest was slated for distribution to the homeless and needy through the Pine Street Inn, Community Services Network's Inn at Spot Pond, and St. Patrick Food Club.

According to Stoneham High science teacher Tom Mayo, about 86 percent of the students participated in some way in Springfest '91.

—With the help of Drug-Free School Act coordinator Gail C. Harrington, Lynnfield parents organized a chemical-free post junior prom party held at the Colonial Fitness Center. Students were bussed to and from the party via the Brush Hill Bus Company's Beantown Trolley 40-passenger limo.

—Two of 20 in the six-week workshop, Winchester fifth grade teachers Alice Madio and Jan Serieka recently participated in "Microcosmos," a Boston University School of Education science education program featuring microorganisms in the classroom.

The only science curriculum workshop in the nation to use microbes - "the most common form of life" - as a vehicle for learning, "microcosmos" is an international collaborative effort involving science educators, graduate students, artists, scientists, and program designer Douglas Zook of B. U.

One program goal is to help cultivate students' curiosity about science and to dispel any fear of science.

—Reading High Assistant Principals Pat Schettini and Bob Quinn were recently recognized as outstanding educational leaders at a state conference celebrating educational leadership.

To the delight of many Reading High students, Reading High report cards will be not be mailed out until July 25th "due to budget constraints."

—Since 1977, Woburn's Scholastic Aptitude Test scores have plummeted 55 points, according to the Woburn School Department and the Woburn edition of the Daily Times Chronicle - with the average SAT verbal grade dipping from 432 to 396, and math grade from 469 to 450, both out of a possible 800 and both lower than state (427 and 473) or national (424 and 476) figures.

Woburn High Guidance Director Shanholtz attributes one reason for the drop to the fact that more students take the SATs now than did 14 years ago.

The good news is that Woburn's switching from a junior high to a middle school program three years ago appears to have been a positive move: ninth graders this year improved their basic skills test scores in writing, reading, math, and social studies - while such scores across the state were falling.

By ANTHONY MANCONI

Many fathers have taken great pleasure in hearing a son or daughter say that he or she wants to be associated with him in his profession, business or career. Kagan and Kagan is a father and son law firm. Barletta and Sons is a home construction business. Tom and Kenny Hill are in their late father's Herbert Hill Insurance Co.

There was no happier parent at graduation exercises than a doctor seeing his son receive his Doctor of Medicine Degree. He envisioned his son joining him in his family medical practice. He was disappointed later to learn that his son intended to continue his medical studies and become a specialist of the nose. "Do you mean," the father asked, "you are going to specialize in the Ear, Eye, Nose and Throat?" "No," the young medic replied, "just the nose." A heartbroken General Practitioner exclaimed, "Which nostril, son?"

My Aunt Nora to the doctor complaining of a pain in her right knee. After an examination, the doctor said, "Nora, the pain is caused by arthritis because of your old age." "I respectfully disagree with you doctor," Aunt Nora said, "my left knee is just as old and that's okay!"

Some kids are spoiled because you can't spank their grandmothers. A husband and wife apologized to the babysitter for coming home late. "That's okay," I understand," the young woman said. "If these were my children I wouldn't be in any hurry to come home either!" My mother loved to listen to E.B. Rideout, the weather forecaster on radio. He was from Down East and he had a quaint way of giving the weather report. There was a whistle in his speech and humidity came out "hum-i-dig-ity." Chubby McDermott told me that he knew him and E.B. Rideout was not his real name. Chubby explains it this way, "I would ask his mother if he could come out and play and she would always say to me, 'O'key Charlie, E.B. Rideout.'" So help me folks, I didn't make that up.

"Use it up, wear it out, make it do, or do without." That's an old Yankee expression. Remember, you can't "throw anything away." We transfer ownership - many times - to someone who doesn't want the darn stuff so why not recycle and give it to those wonderful volunteers who deserve a lot of credit for the job they are doing. GREAT!

Personality Winners: Debbie Conlan, Shannon Rea, Becky Ruede, Rebecca Sutherland, Danielle Connolly, Joyce Cosentino, Beth Plansky, Lauren Halsey, Cathy Jarema, Andrea Parsons and Michelle Grillo, all of Reading; Michele Gagne, Nadine Filosi, Andrea Gillespie, Dick and June Fopiano, Paul and Elaine Tosto, John Tampone, Serena Mazza and Laura Fucione, all of Stoneham; Deidre Murdock, Kelly Campbell, Sarah Bonnell, Megan McKenna, Lisa Kernnerson, Megan O'Neil, Brittany Boulanger, Brian Gianci, Chris Parks and Tom Russo, all of Winchester; Tom Dalesio, Jason Clifford, Stephanie Miano, Karen Musto, Karen Nolan, Brian Hayes, Gregg Gavin, Kathy Musto, Dianne Jackson and Dave Lynch, all of Burlington; Coach Tom Coughlin, Pam Martin, Lisa Magnuson, Colleen McMennimen, Greg Courier, Matt Emerson, Mike Garrity, Kevin McGonagle, Brian Lawnicki and Keith Moses, all of Wakefield; Fire Capt. Raymond Mooney, Firefighter Robert Heptig, Principal Edward Callahan, Frank Bees, Bonnie Atzi, Veronica Andrews, Carl Torrice, Mayor John Rabbitt, Cheryl Willett, Karen Irving, Meghan McCormack, Camille Peterson, all of Woburn.

Also, Dick and Joyce Spindler, David A. Mauceri, Sheila J. Annand, Renee Chisholm, Lisa Mattuchio, Rev. Barbara Cann, Thelma Blanchard, Barbara Boucher, Douglas Staples, Dorothy Reed, Deamie Bennett, Albert Staples and Charles Dunn, all of North Reading; Happy 8-0 Capt. Larz Neilson, Eddie Sargent (Woodchips No. 1 fan), Lt. Eddie Bradbury, Susan Downs, Ed Curtis, Scott Fullerton, Dorothy Lemos, Happy wedding anniversaries Jim and Trudy Mazza (25th), Bob and Nora Branscombe (29th), Richard and Cynthia Bennett (40th), and the "Stars" Ed and Pauline Silva (50th), Woodchips salutes all of you, all of Wilmington; Keith Corbin, Suzie Johnson (thanks for your letter, Sue), Julie Andreason, Gina Marie Avila, Leanne Babine, Linda Bousquet, Dorothy Brema, Linda Burnett, Donna Cavanaugh, Patricia Coviello and Paula Haines, all of Tewksbury; Robert Gray, Mary Gallagher, Jimmy and Florence Fanikos and Fr. Deni Conte, all of Melrose.

I came home from work and said to Kathy, "Good news dear, my boss gave me two tickets to the theater." Kathy exclaimed, "Great! I'll start dressing right away." "Good idea sweetie pie," I said, "the tickets are for tomorrow night!" Any man who has not loved either wine, women or song has been a fool his whole life long!

Mikhail Gorbachev is the first Soviet leader to weigh more than his wife. In my Personality Winners section you will notice congratulations for the 25th, 29th, 40th and 50th wedding anniversaries of some very special people. They believe their marriages are "forever." Today many follow the Hollywood norm - "Until someone better comes along." I have a cousin who has been married several times. She keeps a "wash and wear" bridal gown in the closet.

I know that Adam was born in the late afternoon - a little before Eve. I know they lived in Paradise because they didn't have any mother-in-laws. So they were happy there because they were

"Abel" to raise "Cain." My late Uncle John was a baseball umpire (a second job). He called them as he saw them and it's a wonder he wasn't lynched. One day Aunt Nora took her German Police Dog to the town park and watched her darling husband call the balls and strikes. The dog bolted from the side lines (leash and all) and ran straight to his master who was behind the plate. There he was, wagging his tail with all his might. The fans got a big kick out of when some wiseguy in the radio booth called out over the loud speakers, "Will someone get that Seeing Eye Dog off the field so the game can resume?"

I was told that most political speeches are like a steer's horns. There's a point here and a point there with a lot of "bull" in between. With the increase in taxes Dean Martin said that the cost of living for him has gone up almost a dollar a quart. Bob Giguere bailed out and the parachute failed to open. The emergency chute didn't open either so down he went when he met Blackie Vega going UP. "Hey Blackie," Bob shouted, "do you know anything about parachutes?" "Nope," Blackie yelled back, "by the way Bob, do you know anything about lighting a gas burner?"

We celebrate Independence Day on July 4th. It's when we told King George, "Get Lost!" We don't want any taxes without representation." Now we have too much representation and too much tax. By the way folks, do they have a 4th of July in England? Now please don't throw anything at me but the answer is "Of course they do - it comes after the 3rd of July every year."

While I'm on a roll, how many months have 28 days? February, yes, but wait a minute. They ALL have at least 28 days. I hope you still love me?

Super Stars are James and Doris KilBride of Woburn.

Only Chuck and I had thoroughly toured the island upon which Portsmouth, Middletown and Newport sit. So many times, in fact, that the prospect of doing it again failed to raise even so much as a hint of excitement in us. Susan, John and Tanya, however, very much wanted to drive along Bellevue Ave. to see the historic mansions, then explore the quaint, romantic, rocky coastline that eventually winds its way into downtown Newport. Since Chuck and I had agreed to be tour guides on this holiday excursion, one more trek around the island would have to be the agenda for the day. At least until we made our way to downtown Newport, at which time I was certain I could convince everybody that food and libation would be more in order.

Rte. 114 was unusually deserted; instead of feeling like a major summer holiday, the ride across the island seemed to be occurring on a very early spring Sunday, or a late fall one. We had anticipated frequent delays along the narrow two-lane highway that is the main road through Portsmouth and Middletown. Once we reached Rte. 214, I would show everybody a shortcut around the island, a shortcut that would dump us on First, Second and Third beaches, then onto Bellevue Ave., without the slowdowns that would occur if we proceeded all the way into town via Rte. 114.

Our conversation was light, choppy. One instant we were discussing the former summer homes of the rich and famous who lived in Newport during the industrial revolution; the next we were focusing on what we were going to eat at Tycoon's, the restaurant at Bellevue Plaza which we'd decided would be our eating and watering hole once we completed our ride around the island.

Susan was in the midst of telling us how much she looked forward to one of Tycoon's delicious omelettes when suddenly something went awry. A large gray mass whooshed past Susan's head, smashing into the seatbelt strap directly over her left shoulder. There was a loud shriek emanating from this huge gray mass, which fluttered wide wings, causing feathers to explode throughout the inside of the car. This giant bird then vaulted over the seatbelt strap and smashed into John's chest. The car veered to the breakdown lane, then back onto the highway again. Susan jerkily regained control of the car, at the same time trying to determine what this giant creature was going to do next.

Instantly the bird fluttered its wings again, thrusting its body first into the roof, then the windshield in front of Susan. Screaming, Susan fought to maintain control of the car. Someone in the back seat swore. I felt the car lose speed, as Susan instinctively eased her foot off the gas pedal. The bird continued to smash itself against the front windshield, trying desperately to find its way back into open space.

"Pull the car over to the side of the road!" I yelled. "As soon as we stop, the bird's radar will help him locate the open window, and he'll fly out of the car!"

Susan followed my instructions, and she slowly brought the car to a halt in the sandy breakdown lane. Cars whooshed past us, their occupants unaware of what was going on inside our car. The bird continued to flutter its wings; it was obviously frightened, still unable to locate an escape route. His feathers continued to break away from his wings, floating aimlessly around the inside of Susan's car.

At once, the bird regained the use of his radar, and as quickly as he had arrived, he darted out the driver's side window, disappearing into the sky. All four doors opened at once, and the five of us jumped out of the car, each of us brushing off the tiny gray feathers that had managed to stick to our skin, hair and clothes. By this time, we all were laughing hysterically; we had miraculously avoided an accident, and no one in the car had been injured by the bird. We could let the tension out by breaking into uncontrollable laughter.

The last one out of the car was John. Before I made my exit, I had glanced back to see if he was O.K. He was covered the most with the bird's feathers; his eyes caught mine, and I realized he was still stunned from the bird's impact. He blew several tiny feathers away from his mouth, while waving his arms to clear others that were still floating lazily in front of his face. I was struck with a frightening thought: thank goodness the bird's path had been interrupted by Susan's seatbelt strap, otherwise, John would have been hit with the full force of the bird's body. There was no telling how much injury could have resulted from an impact like that; the image of John's face after being impaled by the bird's long, sharp beak seared me, and I quickly dismissed it from my mind.

"Regarding Henry" Short Takes

"Regarding Henry" Starring Harrison Ford, Annette Bening, Bill Nunn, Mikki Allen. Directed by Mike Nichols. Written by Jeffrey Abrams. Produced by Scott Rudin and Nichols. Rated PG-13.

Only in Hollywood could a head injury become a sanitized, easy-to-overcome malady. While "Regarding Henry" may be heart-warming and life-affirming, you've rarely seen so much formula outside of a Gerber baby food label.

Harrison Ford plays the lizard-like lawyer who will crunch anyone to win a case. He's mean, but you can tell he's successful because of his killer apartment right across from the Metropolitan Museum. Popping out one night to pick up some butts at a package store Harrison himself gets popped by a punk with a trigger finger. But it's the bullet to his chest, not to his head, which causes the loss of oxygen to his brain resulting in severe memory loss and lack of motor skills.

Ford is simply not convincing as the patient. You can never shake the feeling that he is a healthy man playacting at infirmity. Of course, with this script and the schmaltzy direction, he never had much of a chance. Shame on Mike Nichols for losing the jaded edge that cut through his earlier works, such as "Whose Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" "The Graduate," and to a lesser extent, "Working Girl." There's so much predictable treacle in this film that it's not as enjoyable as it could have been with such a talented cast.

And therein lies the saving grace. The supporting cast raises this film up from its sugary depths. Annette Bening is quite convincing as the society wife who learns to stand on her own, while Bill Nunn breathes some reality into the picture as an earthy physical therapist. Best of all is 12-year-old Mikki Allen as Ford and Bening's daughter. She gives the most honest performance in the flick; there is nothing precious or precocious about this child. Sadly, the same can't be said for the film.

We can all breathe a sigh of relief - the dark side of surfing has finally emerged. A few years ago it was the low-budget, "Surf Nazi's Must Die." Now there is "Point Break," an odd film that has several intriguing tangents but is ultimately all wet.

Keanu Reeves is the all-American F.B.I. agent fresh out of school and eager to get the bad guys. His first assignment is to L.A., the bank robbing capital of the country. He's teamed, predictably enough, with a jaded, older agent played by Gary Busey.

As John exited the car, his hands feverishly brushed away more feathers from the front of his shirt and pants. At that time he discovered something sticky on his chest, and we all realized at the same instant exactly what else the bird had done to John when it made its unannounced landing on John's chest.

"Don't worry, John," I said, trying to hold back additional laughter, upon discovering John's misfortunate dilemma. "We'll stop up the road, so you can wash the front of your shirt."

This didn't seem to comfort him, as he flicked the sticky stuff off the tips of his fingers. My eyes looked away from John, darting to the black car that had come to a stop directly behind Susan's. Flashing blue lights inside the grill told us instantly that an unmarked police car had been just seconds behind us. A uniformed officer, who looked to be in his mid-fifties, with gray hair and a slight paunch that appeared to rest comfortably above his belt and holster, sauntered toward us. Automatically, I met him halfway, which ended up being the rear of Susan's car.

He asked if everything was all right, as he surveyed the five of us. We were still chuckling and brushing away the last remaining feathers. I could tell this officer was confused, unable to determine our problem.

"I know you're going to find this hard to believe, officer," I said, noticing his arm patch indicated that he was a Rhode Island state trooper, "but we just had a bird fly into our car, and we were forced to pull over to the side of the road."

The corners of his mouth curled up, revealing first a look of skepticism, then giving way to a full-blown smile. He said, "You're telling me a bird flew into your car?"

I was certain he was going to ask us if we'd been drinking alcohol, but even he realized that it was too early in the day for that.

"Look inside the car for yourself," I said.

He made a sidelong glance into the back seat, and understood that we had indeed, encountered a bird who somehow lost its way.

A feather, which had found its way from John's direction, floated between the officer and me. As his eyes trailed it to the ground, he said, "This is something right out of 'The Twilight Zone'."

I agreed, and after asking us if we were in shape to proceed along our way, to which I replied affirmatively, he walked back to his car. He waited for all of us to get safely back into Susan's car, then he pulled back onto Rte. 114 and proceeded along his way. The trooper was still shaking his head and smirking as he maneuvered his unmarked cruiser into the line of fast-moving traffic.

"Well," I said, "this is a fine way to start our journey today." Then I added: "I am reminded, however, of a story I was once told by a friend who was bombarded by a bird through his open sunroof." At this point I had craned my neck so that I was looking directly at John - "They say it's good luck to have a bird do his duty on you. So maybe this will bring all of us good luck today."

Once again, John failed to be amused or comforted. The feathers settled, and most of the bird's duty wiped from the front of John's shirt, we proceeded toward the next gas station, so that John could use the wash room. We found one, and when John emerged and got back into Susan's car, he appeared happy again. His shirt had huge wet splotches all over the front of it, but they would dry. Now it was time to finally leave the Twilight Zone and find our way to Bellevue Avenue.

HARRISON FORD AND ANNETTE BENING star as Henry and Sarah Turner in "Regarding Henry." The Paramount film was directed by Mike Nichols and produced by Nichols and Scott Rudin.

Unpredictably, Busey does wonders with his lame material and turns in one of the best performances in the film.

One of the more clever aspects of the script features a gang of bank robbers who call themselves the Ex-Presidents; all wear rubber masks and impersonate dead or retired Heads of State. They run a crackerjack operation and can knock over a bank in 90 seconds. And they are driving the feds nuts.

It is Busey's gruff agent who figures out that the robbers are surfers, but no one believes him except the new kid on the block. So, Reeves trains to become a surfer with the help of a tough young woman (Lori Petty) he meets on the beach. It is she who eventually leads him to Bhodi, the guru-esque leader of the Ex-Presidents.

101 Dalmatians stars Cruella De Vil, that sweeping, swirling, chain-smoking villainess whose just dying for a spotted fur coat. Campy and witty, this film hasn't aged a bit in 30 years and retains a distinctive look, even for Disney, as the animators outlined everything, even the backgrounds. Rated G ****

Straight Out of Brooklyn is young filmmaker Matty Rich's gritty, autobiographical look at what life is really like for a black family in New York's Red Hook housing projects. Raw and gritty, it aches with honesty and is an impressive, disturbing film from this first-time writer/director/producer/actor. Rated R.  1/2

Terminator 2: Judgement Day has great, big amazing special effects that are guaranteed to astound you. The plot, on the other hand, is only so-so and fails to live up to the original storyline. It's entertaining, if overlong and overproduced. You won't feel cheated, but aside from the visuals, you won't be wowed either. Rated R.  1/2

Problem Child 2 is an ugly little picture that relies on bathroom humor, vomit humor and food fights as grist for unfunny jokes. Everything about this movie smells, from the plot to the acting to the production values, leaving us with only one question: Why doesn't John Ritter read his scripts? Rated PG-13 X

The Naked Gun 2 1/2: The Smell of Fear is even better than the original. You can't keep up with all the gags as Leslie Nielsen tries to save America from (gulp) environmentally evil Republicans. Along the way he tries to repair his damaged love affair with Priscilla Presley. Much more clever than you'd expect. Rated PG-13 ***

Paper Wedding is the art house version of "Green Card," starring Genevieve Bujold as an unhappy professor who marries a Chilean refugee as a favor. Some of the scenes are gently pleasing and more realistic than you'd expect, but the overall feel is pretentious. Not rated. **

Rocketeer is a whiz-bang kind of action flick that is entertaining enough for adults and sure to please the kiddies. Bill Campbell is the All American Kid who discovers a secret Howard Hughes invention that the Nazis would literally kill to get their hands on. Complete cornball, but a lot of fun in a retro-1930s afternoon serial kind of way. Rated PG. ***

Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves Kevin Costner is miscast as the swashbuckling hero of this medieval tale, he seems to have wandered over from "Field of Dreams." Nearly the entire cast, with the exception of Morgan Freeman, seems to be in the wrong movie. The performances aren't bad, but nothing quite gels. Still, the action sequences are thrilling and, if nothing else, this flick is as politically correct as it is entertaining. Rated PG-13. ***

Jungle Fever is writer/director Spike Lee's take on an interracial love affair that is as much about illicit lust. The film balances a biting humor with a brutal reality, thanks to a first-class script and cast. And when Lee decides to tackle the issue of drugs in his film, he takes no prisoners. Rated R.  1/2

City Slickers is very nearly a sharp comedy about three middle-aged men coming to terms with their lives. But about three-fourths of the way through, the film veers off into total fantasyland in which Billy Crystal, Daniel Stern and Bruno Kirby instantly become Supercowboys who can solve all the problems on the range and in their lives. Rated PG-13  1/2

Thelma & Louise is a feminist/buddy/road movie with an ending that will leave you with a slack jaw, and plenty to talk about. Susan Sarandon and Geena Davis take control of their actions as they lose control of their lives while on a simple weekend fishing trip. An unexpected delight. Rated R ****

Better late than never

Do nice guys really finish last? A recent interview at Hanscom Air Force Base with Mary Pears and her husband Captain Andrew Pears, one of the last returning Desert Storm Veterans may provide the answer to this question.

She said, "It was such a shock. It was in December, and we had our Holidays all planned.

Suddenly word came down in the office that Andy might be deployed to Saudi Arabia. Our relatives rushed from Pennsylvania and Connecticut to visit, but only managed to see him for a day. Before we knew what hit us, he was gone."

He said, "I wanted to spend what I thought might be my last Christmas with Mary and my boys."

She said, "After he left, we packed up and returned with my inlaws to Meadville, Pennsylvania for two months. I needed help you know, Jonathan is only two years old and Joey barely four. There was a lot of pain inside of me at first and I was so lonely, but it gradually turned into an aching feeling that seemed lessened by doing good things for others. I channeled my energy into forming a support group in Meadville for relatives of other Desert Shield participants. I thought it was going to be a different kind of war, bloody like the ones in the past with lots of dead and wounded, and I just wanted something to be there for those families in case they got bad news."

He said, "Lots of sand, not granular but like talcum powder and hard to get out from between your toes. The only way to keep busy was to work, so I did lots of that."

She said, "We returned to Massachusetts in February. I thought Andy would be home soon, and I wanted to be ready for him. I decorated the whole house with yellow ribbons. Then I waited. I waited through the parades in April, and I waited through the homecoming festivities in May. I was always included in the celebrations. I'd be right next to the returned soldiers waving and smiling with their families beside them, and me alone except for the two little hands clutching mine tightly, afraid that I might somehow disappear. I had already worked through depression, anger, sadness, and finally acceptance, only to go through it all again when Andy didn't come home with the other soldiers. Thank God he finally came home on June 20 and will be honored at the Hanscom Air Show, one of the last celebrations for returning Gulf Veterans."

Sometimes nice guys do finish last. Welcome home Andy and all the other "lasts" to come home from the middle East. You made it on time, this last time.

WELCOME HOME ANDY!
